Public health practice in the twenty-first century is in a state of significant flux. Several macro trends are impacting the current practice of governmental public health and will likely have effects for many years to come. These macro trends are described as forces of change, which are changes that affect the context in which the community and its public health system operate.

Macro Trends and the Future of Public Health Practice

The United States bombed irrigation systems in North Vietnam and 661 sections of dikes were damaged or destroyed (1960s). Israel led two raids to destroy the newly-built East Ghor Canal in Jordan due to suspicions that Jordan was overdiverting the Yarmouk River (1969).
